Places of Interest in Moscow

There are a lot of theatres in Moscow. The world-famous Bolshoi Theatre is situated in the centre of our capital. Its building with eight tall columns is really beautiful. The company of the theatre is famous not only in Russia but abroad too. When the Bolshoi Ballet was in the USA, Americans called it a “company of stars”.

The Maly Theatre opened in 1824 and as there was already the Bolshoi Theatre in the square, the new theatre got the name Maly. In 1929 a monument to the dramatist Alexander Ostrovsky (1823—1888) appeared in front of the theatre building. Theatre-goers can see practically all the plays by this great Russian writer here.

Red Square is in the centre of Moscow. It is 695 metres long and 130 metres wide, which makes it the largest square in Moscow. There are many historic buildings in the Square. One of them is St Basil's Cathedral. Its architects are Barma and Postnik. There are nine churches in the building.

Not far from it you can see a monument to Kuzma Minin and Prince Dmitry Pozharsky. The monument appeared in the Square in 1818. But the Kremlin wall is the oldest in Red Square. It runs along one side of it and has three tall towers. The wall and the towers are 500 years old.

1. Red Square is larger than the other Moscow squares.
2. Two architects built St Basil's Cathedral.
3. The first name of Red Square was different.
4. There are more than ten churches in St Basil's Cathedral.
